Wherever I turn it is dark, on land dark, and yet darker on sea. But the seeker for truth shall behold: blessed John beheld the town Where the saints stand about the throne, where martyrs take up their crown. His tale of it glows with fire, with heartsease, with joyful content, And oh I for a heart of resolve to share in its high renown. And the builder of truth shall behold; when Alaric crashed in his might A whirlwind of terror on Rome, and its legions were winnowed in flight, Then Austin did gather his soul to tell of the city of God In a dream of its gallant bypaths, and its gardens of purest delight. For a new Atlantis I long; but the old clingeth round my feet, When a new song I would sing, the old one lilts too sweet: I would gladly surrender the old, to behold the Kingdom new, As becometh a dreamer of dreams, who seeks to make vision complete. The noise of the tumult has passed, the war-travail wails to its end. The close of an age is appearing; whereto shall the vision extend? The soul of the future is lost if it gain not the city of God, Lo !we are the seekers, the builders; we that soul to its destiny bend.
