Excerpt: . . . 8 University of California Publications. education Some of the Connecticut men were particularly desirous of making the new college a perennial fountain of orthodoxy. In this they had the heartiest sympathy of the faction in Massachusetts who were in active opposition to the latitudinarian tendencies already present and influential in Harvard College. There is extant a memorandum, supposed to have been drawn up by Cotton Mather, proposing that a university be erected in Connecticut by a synod called for that purpose, and that it be in fact and in administration a true school of the churches. In a letter written September 15, 1701, Increase Mather expressed the fear that the political changes then imminent would result in taking away the government of the college from those interested in its establishment. Judge Sewall and Secretary Addington, of Massachusetts, were requested to suggest the form of an act for the establishment of the new institution. In their letter, accompanying the draft of such an act, they declare that they have delayed making recommendations because of not knowing what to do for fear of overdoing. And that is the reason there is no mention made of any visitation, which is exceedingly proper and beneficial; all humane societies standing in need of a check upon them. So it is evident that the relation of both church and state to educational administration had been considered; and that, the dangers of both civil and ecclesiastical control were deliberately guarded against by...
