Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Great Reliever: A Four-Act Play Scene - A Special Private Room in a Hospital. It is the last room on the side of a hall which terminates in a sun-parlor. The doorway into the hall is at the extreme left front of the stage. It is a large doorway - large enough to admit a bed. There are a framed set of rules on the back of the door. When the door stands open (the hinges being on the far side), one gets a glimpse into the sun-parlor, which is furnished in wicker. On the far side of this door there is an electric bracketlamp. A mahogany chair stands under it. Against the wall of the room, on the far side of the chair, stands a mahogany dresser; on it are two empty glass vases and a small tumbler of antiseptic solution in which there is a thermometer. There is a wastebasket between the dresser and the chair. The extreme rear of the room is in the form of an alcove. Against the wall of this alcove, opposite the dresser, stands a small mahogany table. In the rear wall, between the dresser and the table, there is a large window through which one can see the trees and the houses on the other side of the street, the room being on the ground floor. An ordinary mahogany chair stands before this window. To the right of the alcove, parallel to the first window but farther front, is a second window not quite so large. A folding screen stands before it. In front of the screen stands a low white iron cot, dressed with fresh...
