Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from History of Texas, Vol. 4: Fort Worth and the Texas Northwest Edition J. A. Douglas Smith. A highly successful oil operator and a pioneer in the oil development of Wichita County. J. A. Douglas Smith, of Burkhurnett, has never been a soft-handed, white-collar man, but grew up inured to the work and hardships of the cattle range, and acquired initiative, self-reliance and resourcefulness in a business even more uncertain and requiring fully as much nerve as operating for oil. He was born in Wise County. Texas, in 1870. At that time Wise County was well out toward the frontier and the fear of Indian incursion had not yet subsided. His parents, B. M. and Margaret (Shinn) Smith, now deceased, were early settlers in Texas. His father was a native of Mississippi and served with a regiment from that state throughout the four years of the Confederate war. In January, 1870, he brought his family to Texas and settled in the Pleasant Valley section of Wise County, about two miles from old Bridgeport and about twelve miles from the county seat of Decatur. He was a farmer and cattleman and also a school teacher. In 1881 he taught the first school in Pleasant Valley, the schoolhouse being a log structure. He was a genuinely good man and upright citizen, and impressed his sturdy character on that pioneer community. While B. M. Smith was deeply interested in the education of his own children and those of the community, the conditions of the frontier also made it necessary that every member of the family as soon as possible should contribute some useful form of labor. Remarkable as...
