I begged them to have it trapped, and, until the trap was procured, to keep the hole always closely covered with a folded wet cloth. Next day the patient was for the first time slightly improved; and from this date recovery slowly took place. The fever lasted about sixteen days. Care was taken to see that the sink-hole was kept closed. Convalescence was slow; and the patient remained weak for some time. Cases XXI. and XXII.--In a house near Shooter s-hill, a womanservant was attacked with remittent fever, on the 3d of February 1858, during a rapid thaw. On the 5th she seemed recovering. On the 6th she was again attacked, and continued ill until the 10th (or 7th day), when an improvement took...
