But she thought of the resolution she had made, and resisted the temptation bravely; though there was a tear in her eye when her companion, of whom she was very fond, and who had counted on her company as one of the chief pleasures of the jaunt, went away disappointed, and half disposed to be cross, at her refusal. But she was amply repaid for her selfdenial, when she was able, three days before her fathers birthday, to bring the slippers to her mother, neatly and carefully worked, and in ample time to be sent to the shoemaker and have the leather soles fastened to them before the day on which they were to be presented; and when at last she gave them to her father, as she wished him Many happy returns of the day, he kissed her, and said, Your mother told me of your conduct with regard to the gipsy party, though you thought she knew nothing about it. I am greatly pleased with these pretty slippers; but I am much more pleased to see that my little daughter can work so bravely and steadily to cure herself of her fault. THE LIGHT OF HOME. PILGRIM had been travelling in many lands, and had sat by many a fountain, and talked to many persons, old and young, of high and holy things. He was now returning to his home, and his soul...
